EASTER REFLECTION

This Sunday is traditionally known as Good Shepherd Sunday.

Good shepherds are needed in every walk of life.

In our homes we need parents who really care about their children, who spend time with them, and who still care for them even when they disappoint them.

In our schools we need teachers who know their pupils and who take a personal interest in their well-being.

In our hospitals we need doctors and nurses who care about their patients and who do not treat them as objects.

In public life we need people who care about the welfare of others rather than their own selfish interests.

In the church we need priests who are willing to give a loving service to all their brothers and sisters.
